

PLATINUM

An anthology of essays crowdsourced from members
edited by Stephen Waddington Found.Chart PR, Hon FCIPR

Forewords by

Carolyn Fairbairn Director General, CBI
Sarah Hall President, CIPR
Professor Tim Traverse-Healy Founder, CIPR

CELEBRATING THE CIPR AT 70

CONTENTS

12 INTRODUCTION

Platinum: A celebration of the 70th anniversary of the CIPR Stephen Waddington

Platinum is the story of the CIPR as told by its volunteer members.

15 FOREWORD I

Public relations critical for public engagement Carolyn Fairbairn

In the CIPR's 70th year, I am delighted to support Platinum, a celebration of the Chartered Institute and its members and a reflection on seven decades of progress in PR.

18 FOREWORD II

The journey to professionalism in public relations Sarah Hall

CIPR volunteers have a capacity to stop you in your tracks and push you to really think. Think about the work we do, about its relevance to society and about what being a public relations professional really means. Platinum is a case in point.

21 FOREWORD III

Back to the future of public relations Professor Tim Traverse-Healy

A founder of the CIPR describes its formation in 1948 at the end of World War II with the aim of improving cooperation and reducing conflict between groups in society.

SECTION | Performance

The impact of practising public relations as a management discipline on modern organisations

- 25 CHAPTER 01
Third sector: When doing good isn't enough Sarah Wright
Trust in the charitable sector is declining. How can public relations help to tackle the situation?
- 29 CHAPTER 02
Public engagement in an increasingly fractured world Eva Maclaine
We must learn from the role of public relations in international discourse.
- 34 CHAPTER 03
Serving the public interest John Brown
The CIPR's founding local government members emphasised the need for public relations practitioners to consider the public interest.
- 39 CHAPTER 04
Doing more with less Jen Robson
Public sector practitioners are doing more with less. They're at the sharp end of innovation in public relations.
- 44 CHAPTER 05
In-house: Speaking truth to power David Jones
In-house practitioners are a critical link between management, employees and the wider public.
- 48 CHAPTER 06
The impact of internal communication excellence Jenni Field
Internal communications is no longer an offshoot of human relations but is recognised for its contribution in driving employee engagement and organisational performance.
- 52 CHAPTER 07
Academic rigour and business application Toby Roe
The role of public relations in enabling academia and business to learn from one another.
- 56 CHAPTER 08
The NHS at 70 and the strategic role of public relations Liz Davies
Strong public engagement is critical to the future success of a thriving NHS. Its practitioners are at the forefront.

- 60 CHAPTER 09
The CIPR and Whitehall: Influencing and embedding professionalism Stuart Baird
The CIPR has its roots in government communication. Both organisations are an important part of the story of the growing professionalism of public relations.
- 65 CHAPTER 10
Professional evolution of lobbying Paul Beckford
Political lobbying, like public relations itself, is modernising and holding itself to professional standards.

SECTION | Perspective

Reflections on the CIPR's history and its communities

- 70 CHAPTER 11
A brief history of the CIPR Phil Morgan
The vision and purpose of the CIPR has remained a constant since it was founded 70 years ago: promoting excellence in public relations for practitioners and in the public interest.
- 74 CHAPTER 12
The UK's contribution to public relations scholarship Richard Bailey
The UK's role in teaching and learning - and why it should matter to practitioners.
- 79 CHAPTER 13
Progressive professionalism in public relations Koray Camgoz
What does professionalism mean for public relations and is it an achievable goal in public relations?
- 85 CHAPTER 14
A CIPR Professionalism milestone: Obtaining Chartered Status Professor Anne Gregory
Achieving Chartered Status was a significant milestone for the then Institute of Public Relations and the wider public relations profession.
- 90 CHAPTER 15
The value of CIPR networks in local delivery Tim Hudson
A celebration of the CIPR's volunteer army, which delivers and engages with members locally and nationally, told through a member's personal journey.

- 95 CHAPTER 16
Professional qualifications: Past, present and future Dr Heather Yaxley
The CIPR has played an unrivalled role in the evolution of professional public relations education over the past 70 years.
- 100 CHAPTER 17
Characterising the public relations profession: Who are we and who will we become?
Ben Verinder
Exploring the demographics of public relations practitioners through the CIPR's annual State of the Profession survey.
- 105 CHAPTER 18
A brief history of the CIPR's benevolent fund: iprovision Pat Gaudin
How iprovision has developed over time, its funding and governance, who and how it helps, its current activities and the future.
- 109 CHAPTER 19
Founding father: Sir Thomas Fife Clark Gareth Thompson
A biography of one of the founders of the CIPR, Sir Thomas Fife Clark, who played an instrumental role in professionalising PR in Government following World War II.
- 113 CHAPTER 20
What history tells us about public relations Professor Tom Watson
An historical perspective on the development of public relations.
- 118 CHAPTER 21
Preparing tomorrow's practitioners Dr Joyce Costello
Professional and academic collaboration when preparing students to work in a fast moving profession that itself is a work in progress.
- 122 CHAPTER 22
The CIPR as a driver of innovation in practice Dr Jon White
At 70 years old, the Institute has made good progress on many fronts, which can continue with a greater commitment to innovation and to meeting Charter commitments to finding new ideas, solutions to problems in practice and wider society.

SECTION | Potential

Exploring the future of the profession such as automation, artificial intelligence, and tools

- 127 CHAPTER 23
The future of the PR industry lies with its people Laura Richards
Public relations' role, in business and wider society, is facing a step-change as the next generation of practitioners enter the industry – and it will be for the better.
- 131 CHAPTER 24
Robot relations: Artificial intelligence and automation Andrew Bruce Smith
Modelling the impact of artificial intelligence and automation on public relations. Is it more opportunity than threat?
- 135 CHAPTER 25
How to be an agile professional Rachel Picken
Agile is an increasingly important but misunderstood means of public relations management and workflow.
- 141 CHAPTER 26
Why digital inclusion matters to your communications now Catherine Grinyer and Gavin B Harris
Digital technology hasn't lived up to its promise of democratising media. We need to hold it to account and work harder.
- 146 CHAPTER 27
Profession of the future: Public relations driving public benefit Matt Appleby and Dr Cara Reed
Public relations has an opportunity to reassert its value to society and cement its place as the driver of purpose-led organisations by embracing a modern, more fluid concept of what it means to be professional.
- 151 CHAPTER 28
Flexible future Mandy Brooks
A flexible approach to working offers an opportunity to improve the agility and diversity of the public relations profession and secure its future success.
- 156 CHAPTER 29
Being capable for the future Professor Anne Gregory and Dr Johanna Fawkes
Time served is no longer a benchmark of success for public relations practitioners. UK academics have defined the capabilities for practitioners.

SECTION | Practice

A discussion of modern areas of public relations practice

- 163 CHAPTER 30
Improving our value by proving our value Richard Bagnall
Analytics and measurement provides the means of improving the performance and value of public relations.
- 167 CHAPTER 31
Process is the root of creativity and getting people talking Graham Goodkind
Strong creative and storytelling lie at the heart of successful PR. It requires a mix of process and perspiration.
- 172 CHAPTER 32
The business of influence Scott Guthrie
The fragmentation of media has given rise to so-called influencers. It's a huge opportunity for public relations.
- 177 CHAPTER 33
Community co-creation as a means of public relations Ruth Fry
Engaging the public in co-creation is a powerful form of public relations. Community co-creation or co-production is not just the latest buzzword, but a distinct shift in policy.
- 182 CHAPTER 34
Fake and furious Paul Mylrea
Public relations must take an assertive role in tackling fake news and misinformation.
- 186 CHAPTER 35
Working with Wikipedia Dr Paul Wilkinson
Wikipedia is too important a communication platform to be misunderstood by public relations practitioners; rather than manipulating it, public relations practitioners should encourage wider engagement.
- 190 CHAPTER 36
Facing up to a modern day crisis Amanda Coleman
Dealing with a crisis is more complex now than ever. Being ready to face a crisis situation is essential for every communicator as it can make or break an organisation.

- 195 CHAPTER 37
Re-thinking crisis communication theory Mark Mann
Theory provides discipline and rigour in public relations practice. That's right and proper but models of crisis communication must be re-evaluated to reflect media change.
- 201 CHAPTER 38
Shifting the ethics discussion from frameworks to professional judgement
Steven Shepperson-Smith
Good judgement is a learned behaviour. Practitioners must train and reflect on scenarios throughout their career.
- 205 CHAPTER 39
Making the case for media relations in the modern age? Diane Green
Media relations is enjoying a renaissance in public relations as all media becomes digital and social. In fact it never really went away.
- 209 CHAPTER 40
Asserting expert opinion in an era of fake news Daniel Gerrella
Exploring public relations as a means of re-establishing trust in leaders, politicians and experts.

SECTION | Provocation

Exploring issues related to the future of the profession

- 214 CHAPTER 41
Culture and its contribution to modern public relations Ella Minty
Respect for cultural issues in international public relations is critical to practice wherever you work in the world.
- 219 CHAPTER 42
Impact of diversity initiatives on practitioners and practice Elizabeth Bridgen
Are efforts to change the public relations industry making a difference? The profession in the UK has a long way to go to represent the publics that it serves.
- 224 CHAPTER 43
Diversity in an age of global integration Farzana Baduel
A diverse public cultivates tolerance and accelerates learning and development. It's good public relations.

228 CHAPTER 44

Achieving parity of esteem for mental health Sally Sykes

The role of public relations in removing the stigma of mental illness and ensuring mental health is as valued as physical health.

233 CHAPTER 45

Public relations and a kinder conversation Richard Evans

By genuinely listening to our organisations' critics, public relations practitioners can both become more effective and contribute to a kinder conversation within society.